THE COMET AND THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION. Section, &c. Scientific Buffconery - A lecture on the subject of the comet was delivered by Professor Miller. The learned gentleman said that comets were so called from coma, not a state of insensibility, but a head of hair; though a comet seemed to partake more of the nature of a fox in regard look, and a call is requested from every one. to its tail, which was a decided brush. The denser portion of a comet was termed nucleus, or kernel; but here was a kernel without a shell, which reminded him of a colonel in the army; and association of ideas suggested the remark that the present comet was situated below Ursa Major and beneath the Pole Star, a star which, on account of the Pole, must be a convenience to the Great Bear, whose climbing propensities were well oct 19 Fancy and Variety Store. known to the members of the Zoological Section of that Association. The erbit of a comet was an elongated ellipse, which puzz'ed even American astronomers to calculate. The revolutions of some comets could be predicted with considerable certainty; and perhaps those comets might be compared to certain despotic States. Halley was the first to foretell the reappearance of a comet; and has thus achieved a lasting reputation among philoso- sale very low at phers, which is preferable to what Mr. Carlyle calls the temporary hallelojub of flunkeys. The present comet was named Donati's comet, as another is called Encke's comet, after the name of its first discoverer; and, though a comet was of small use to its owner, it gave him a title more illustrious than that of comes, or count. The scientific lecturer, whose discourse had been interrupted throughout by indignant murmers, was greeted at its conclusion with a storm of hisses and groans, which he acknowledged by taking a sight at his audience, who, in return, pelted him with orange-peel.

affair, is of late becoming quite funny. Its last number contains three illustrations which are not bad. One is the picture of an affectionate papa walking out with his children to see the comet, which is blazing in full view of all of them, and he is promising to hold up each in turn, that he or she may see the wonder. Another represents the Americans as having seized upon the tail of the favorite sea-serpent, instead of the genuine Atlantic cable, and we see the creature's tail coming through the roof of the electrician's hut, where the latter is convulsing the animal with his shocks, the head of the scrpent, who is in a fearful rage, being seen miles away, his mouth distorted with anger at the impudence of man. The third, and best, is a view of the new Chinese ambassador to England, meeting three English girls, whose large feet shock him so terribly that he declares that he must really be sent back to a civilized country.
